The purchase price has been fixed by the Vendor at $10,000, payable in $5,000 in cash and as to the balance in 500 fully paid-up shares.

Would it not be wise to leave in mind one of the poet's lines, "Even the heart of hearts is secret?"

France, like England, is displaying great energy in developing her industries and extending her trade. This shows the consequences of the silent march that Germany was extending towards the same end, and very often not by strict commercial loyalty. However, the French, in now being applied to France, laying down now and extending plans to produce outputs that will not, while paying, the markets where Germany dominates. The Government will do all it can to aid in the technical and professional education of artists and commercial travellers. The world all round appears to be rousing up. So much the better for the world.

Edmond de Goncourt left his relatively large fortune to found an opposition French Academy where the members, limited to ten, were each to receive an annual of 9,000 francs, plus a monthly stipend of a franc. The Academy, known as the "Académie de Goncourt," only received 1,000 francs each year from the State, and that calculated on their weekly attendance. Goncourt's natural heirs have turned up—artists and farmers, who oppose the Academy. They have actually been to turn up no second academy can exist without the permission of the State, and it is considered an honor in the literary world to accept the personal invitation of Queen Victoria to visit London next year. He may count upon a warmer welcome than he has received in Russia. The people go to see the Frenchmen.

THE DANGERS OF THE PHOTOGRAPHIC FLASH LIGHT.

An event that might have had serious results occurred on Saturday evening, 14th November, in the hall of the Shikoku, where the Tokyo Dramatic and Musical Society gave its recent performance. It was desired to obtain photographs of the actors and actresses in costume, and groups. They had actually been in some of the scenes. Professor Barton kindly promised to take the photographs. The work had to be done by flash light, the hall being too dark for other methods, and every thing was arranged by Mr. Kondo, Professor Barton's photographic assistant, who, having always proved himself trustworthy and competent, was left to do his work. Two flash lamps were used, one to be manipulated by the Professor himself, the other by Mr. Kondo. Before the flash light was used, the Professor, a trial photograph was taken. The lamp worked perfectly and an excellent negative was obtained. The next exposure was made in exactly the same manner, the actors and actresses being then in position. But on the occasion Mr. Kondo's lamp—or, to speak more accurately, the lamp at which he happened to be stationed, for his Professor had made no distinction between the two lamps, as the Professor was not aware of the danger of the flash light, and several of the fragments struck Mr. Kondo, cutting him severely about the mouth and hands or burning themselves in his right arm and shoulder. Mrs. Y. P. P. also, received a few pellets of the flash light, and several of her hands, but happily—and remarkably—nobody else was touched. Mr. Kondo was taken to one of the dressing rooms, where the ladies and ladies and ladies bandaged his wounds. Dr. Majima was soon upon the scene, and under his directions Mr. Kondo was conducted to the Tokyo Hospital, accompanied by Professor Barton, who remained until everything possible had been done for the injured man's comfort. We are glad to be able to say that the wounds are found to be trifling, and the explosion of a flash light, which the first time of the flash light, which may have to be repeated, Mr. Kondo will be none the worse. As to the cause of the accident, we are not in a position to speak. It may have been one of many other things. Perhaps when Mr. Kondo described exactly how he mixed the flash powder, an explanation may suggest itself. Nothing is stranger than the very limited area of the explosion's operation. Professor Barton was standing within four feet of Mr. Kondo, yet the latter received the whole charge—Japan Mail.

A correspondent writes to the Standard—The various opinions expressed in your recent issues of the dignity of clerical biographies are amusing to us on this side of the water, where the clergy of all sects use the wheel, and do not consider their dignity any more compromised when astride a wheel than when astride a horse or walking. The only question of dignity we ever heard of was that of a Western clergyman, who, in his local paper, it was proper to ride his bicycle at the funeral of a distant relative by marriage, provided that he kept at a sufficient distance from the house. The long-suffering editor approved of the arrangement on condition that the mourner, by marriage, should not wear a coloured sweater or a jockey-cap.

Everybody knows a "Safety" when he sees it; not everybody may know its origin. Its construction is said to be due to the fact that a certain little Englishman had an abnormally short pair of legs and a military disposition to ride the whirling wheel. About twenty years ago, when the marauders of the "wheel" ordinary was in vogue as the only known form of the bicycle, a country resident became afflicted with a consuming desire to ride his machine along with the best. His little legs were not long enough to reach the pedals, but he had an ordinary set down to his own peculiar build, and of the result evolved the chain-driven safety, practically the same in principle and construction as the wheels now in use.
